

Food and Drink Exporters' Guide to Logistics Service Providers for Continental Europe

About the Guide

This Bord Bia Guide to Logistics Service Providers (LSP's) presents an overview of potential Logistics Service Providers to Continental Europe. The Guide illustrates a sample of typical providers based in Ireland and others based in specific markets. It is not intended to be comprehensive or exhaustive. Other providers are available in the market place. Inclusion in the Guide is not a recommendation and exporters should apply due diligence when selecting or contracting with any of the providers listed.

This initial research was commissioned by Bord Bia and conducted by SCMG.

Guide to Logistics Service Providers

Irish food, drink and horticulture exports represent some 10% of merchandise exports and 16% of industrial output. The success in the marketplace of such exports is dependent upon the timely delivery of the product in appropriate condition and at competitive cost to destination. The efficacy of the Irish food and drink export supply chain is thus critical to the success of Ireland's exports in these sectors. Indeed in many industrial sectors there is an emerging realisation that it is supply chains that compete, more so than individual products. In essence what this means is that no matter how good your product is, you will not be successful or lose market share unless it can be delivered where it is wanted, when it is wanted, and at less cost than competitors.

Thirty-four percent of Irish exports already reach the Euro zone and a number of companies have achieved significant business in this area. Identifying appropriate transport channels and distributors is however not an easy task, especially for new entrants and those exporters with relatively small initial volumes.

Logistics and distribution is one key area where companies can collaborate to realise economies of scope and scale. This is the basic premise behind many Logistics Service Providers' value proposition that they can realise economies of scope and scale on behalf of customers who would be otherwise unable to compete effectively in export markets.

The logistics sector, like many other sectors, has its own dynamics and complexities. This Guide includes a range of different types of Logistics Service Providers (LSPs). The logistics sector in fact comprises many different types of LSPs and various, sometimes overlapping labels, are often used to describe such companies.

For ease of reference we have categorised the LSPs profiled in this guide into three broad categories: hauliers, forwarders and third party logistics providers (3PLs). It should be noted however that these are not binding labels as such and that there can be overlap in terms of the services provided across each of these types. Many hauliers for example now offer value adding services that 3PLs offer so the overlaps can be quite significant.

Some of the value adding services quoted have in fact almost become generics like track and trace and real time temperature monitoring. Some LSPs can provide a complete range of value adding services which could also include storage, inventory management, cross docking, order picking, packing and re-packing, labelling, bar coding and performance management and reporting.

A basic description of LSP types is included in the following table.

LSP	Description
Haulier	A haulier might be most appropriate when you and your customer or distributor have your own warehouses and storage facilities where products can be picked, packed and despatched to your customer’s equivalent facility in the market place for onward distribution to the end user or final customer. The emphasis then is on working with a point to point transport provider.
Forwarder	A forwarder would be most appropriate when you need some logistics expertise not available within your own company. Forwarders are like travel agents for the logistics sector. A forwarder can or will manage all aspects of your order from collection to delivery to the final customer. They will often subcontract the actual carriage of the freight to hauliers and other transport providers.
3PL	A 3PL or third party logistics provider will manage all aspects of your exports from one end of the supply chain to the other using their own asset based resources including infrastructure and transport and often working with a network of partners. They thus combine the functions of both forwarders and hauliers. They also provide what a haulier or forwarder might describe as value adding services as “standard”.

Table 1: LSP Type Descriptions

The Guide lists a wide range of different LSP types including indigenous Irish companies, other European companies in some cases delivering to Ireland and providing the opportunity for backhaul opportunities to their home base markets and multinational and global logistics companies operating in Ireland.

Our research also suggests that the costs of using different LSP types can vary dramatically depending on the temperature range and the destination. This is obviously a key consideration when selecting a LSP. It is important to consider what your requirements are including what service levels are expected in individual markets. Equivalent rates for pallet shipments on defined routes can vary dramatically between different provider types.

The price is sensitive to the temperature range, the quantity being shipped, the service required and the type of provider. The more sophisticated LSPs are not necessarily more expensive and vice versa depending on the circumstances but type is a factor to consider when defining the service you require.

It should be noted that the classification is less important than defining the required service and identifying a provider that delivers that service in a way that is consistent with your marketing and brand values.

Some profiles include employee numbers and turnover figures. These have been obtained from reliable sites where this information is publicly available.

Exporters Checklist: Selecting a Logistics Service Provider

Selecting a Logistics Service Provider

Selecting a Logistics Service Provider (LSP) is a key decision for any exporter. However, there are fundamental decisions that must be made that will determine your success in any particular export market.

1. What is your logistics model?
2. Do you have logistics infrastructure of your own?
3. Do we need a haulier, forwarder or a 3PL (third party logistics provider)?

What is your logistics model?

Most companies would not consider logistics to be their core business. There is lots of jargon about what type of logistics providers operate in the market place but you need to be clear about what service you need and want. There is no right or wrong answer but there is an optimal or lowest total cost solution depending on your existing capability, ability to invest or not as well as the vast range of different providers available in the market place.

Large companies normally operate a model depending on the market they are delivering to. This could include their own infrastructure, working with third parties and joint ventures in other markets depending on the level of ownership and control that is required. It is important to consider that these can all happily co-exist with the same business when dealing with different markets.

Do we need a haulier, a forwarder or a 3PL?

There is no need to reinvent the wheel. The number of different Logistics Service Providers available present cost effective and efficient transport and logistics services meaning that you can focus and concentrate on your core business. Distributing product locally or in your home market should not be confused with exporting products to Continental Europe. What is the most appropriate way for you to ensure that your products can get to market at the right time and in the right condition? In addition you may also require Value Adding services like packing and repacking, inventory management and order processing.

LSP Checklist

The following checklist might help you define your requirements and service expectations better. By considering your customers' requirements, your export markets and the services you need the answer to what type of provider you should engage with or consider should be clear.

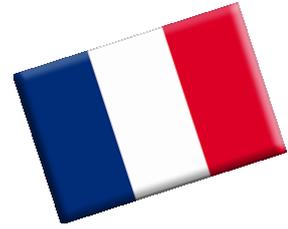

#	Question?	Key Issues
1	Who is your customer?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Is your customer a distributor, an agent, a RDC, a local retailer or the final customer? Where are you expected to deliver to? Is delivery point determined for you?
2	What are your customers' requirements in that market?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Is the Logistics Service Provider nominated by the customer? What service level is required? Are there any special delivery requirements?
3	How much and how frequently will we be shipping goods?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Are your products temperature and / or time sensitive? Can you ship full loads or less than full loads or pallets to customers? Will you be shipping daily, weekly or monthly?
4	Markets	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> What Markets are you shipping to and where? Are there any special market requirements you need to consider? Are there established providers who service specific markets?
5	What are the terms of sale?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> When does title of goods transfer? Ex works or fully delivered? What Incoterms apply?
6	Service Levels	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> What service level expectations does customer require? What service levels can LSP provide? Are minimum orders or lead times required?
7	Accountability and Responsibility?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Who is responsible and accountable from despatch to final delivery? Do you require accompanied shipments? Who is responsible for damage and deterioration of products?
8	Track and Trace?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Is full traceability required? Do you require temperature monitoring of shipments? Do you require Proof of Delivery?
9	Value Add Service	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Do you require warehousing services? Do you require inventory management services? Do you require packing and repacking services?
10	Performance Management	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Do you have competitive rates from different providers? Do you need delivery performance reports? Do you need cost performance reports?
